

Pearl Prudoehl died in 2009 at the age of 95.

This week she'll make sure an out-of-work mother can take her child to the doctor.

Pearl grew up on a dairy farm in Lewiston, MN. During a terrible snowstorm in the 1930s, a train derailed near her family farm and the men working on the train came seeking food and shelter in her home. Pearl, 20 years old at the time, remembers one of the men offering her mother spare change for her hospitality. Her mother declined, saying, "Our family doesn't charge; we give." Pearl lived this motto during her more than 90 years. She extended this same philosophy when upon her death she left virtually her entire estate to charity.
